The Standards of Ethical Conduct for Employees of the Executive Branch, articulated in 5 CFR § 2635.101, "Basic Obligation of Public Service," states in pertinent part the following:

- (a) Public service is a public trust. Each employee has a responsibility to the United States Government and its citizens to place loyalty to the Constitution, laws and ethical principles above private gain. To ensure that every citizen can have complete confidence in the integrity of the Federal Government, each employee shall respect and adhere to the principles of ethical conduct set forth in this section, as well as the implementing standards contained in this part and in supplemental agency regulations.
- (b) General principles. The following general principles apply to every employee and may form the basis for the standards contained in this part. Where a situation is not covered by the standards set forth in this part, employees shall apply the principles set forth in this section in determining whether their conduct is proper.
 - (1) Public service is a public trust, requiring employees to place loyalty to the Constitution, the laws and ethical principles above private gain.
 - (8) Employees shall act impartially and not give preferential treatment to any private organization or individual.
 - (14) Employees shall endeavor to avoid any actions creating the appearance that they are violating the law or the ethical standards set forth in this part. Whether particular circumstances create an appearance that the law or these standards have been violated shall be determined from the perspective of a reasonable person with knowledge of the relevant facts.

5 CFR § 2635.502, "Personal and Business Relationships," states in pertinent part the following:

- (a) Consideration of appearances by the employee. Where an employee knows that a particular matter involving specific parties is likely to have a direct and predictable effect on the financial interest of a member of his household, or knows that a person with whom he has a covered relationship is or represents a party to such matter, and where the employee determines that the circumstances would cause a reasonable person with knowledge of the relevant facts to question his impartiality in the matter, the employee should not participate in the matter unless he has informed the agency designee of the appearance problem and received authorization from the agency designee in accordance with paragraph (d) of this section.
 - (1) In considering whether a relationship would cause a reasonable person to question his impartiality, an employee may seek the assistance of his supervisor, an agency ethics official or the agency designee.
 - (2) An employee who is concerned that circumstances other than those specifically described in this section would raise a question regarding his impartiality should use the process described in this section to determine whether he should or should not participate in a particular matter.

29 CFR § 1604.11, "Sexual Harassment," states in pertinent part the following:

- (a) Harassment on the basis of sex is a violation of section 703 of title VII. 1 Unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature constitute sexual harassment when (1) submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment, (2) submission to or rejection of such conduct by an individual is used as the basis for employment decisions affecting such individual, or (3) such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual's work performance or creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working environment.
- (b) In determining whether alleged conduct constitutes sexual harassment, the Commission will look at the record as a whole and at the totality of the circumstances, such as the nature of the sexual advances and the context in which the alleged incidents occurred. The determination of the legality of a particular action will be made from the facts, on a case by case basis.
- (d) With respect to conduct between fellow employees, an employer is responsible for acts of sexual harassment in the workplace where the employer (or its agents or supervisory employees) knows or should have known of the conduct, unless it can show that it took immediate and appropriate corrective action.

The U.S. Attorney's Manual 3-5.103, "Policy Statement on Sexual Harassment," states in pertinent part the following:

It is the policy of the USAOs and the EOUSA to prohibit sexual harassment in their offices. Sexual harassment is unacceptable conduct in the workplace and will not be condoned. Personnel management within the USAOs and EOUSA shall be free from prohibited personnel practices, as outlined in the provisions of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978. All employees shall avoid conduct which undermines these principles.

Sexual harassment is a complex and sensitive issue. It is a form of employee misconduct which undermines the integrity of the employment relationship. Harassment on the basis of sex is a violation of Section 703 of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended. In accordance with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission Guidelines on Discrimination Because of Sex, (29 C.F.R. ?.11) [sic], unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature constitute sexual harassment when: (1) submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment, (2) submission to or rejection of such conduct by an individual is used as the basis for employment decisions affecting such individual, or (3) such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual's work performance or creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working environment.

All employees must be allowed to work in an environment free from unsolicited and unwelcome sexual overtures. Sexual harassment debilitates morale and interferes in the work productivity of its victims and other employees. Therefore, behavior of this nature will not be tolerated.

Multiple USAO-SDIL employees described to the OIG their impression that Wigginton and were engaged in an extra-marital affair. For example, staff told the OIG that Wigginton and frequently carpooled to meetings together alone, had lunch alone together almost every day, and flirted with each other frequently during the day in the office, which was embarrassing and distracting for other employees. Staff relayed that their affair was obvious and not discrete. During office meetings, always sat by Wigginton and Wigginton and Wigginton also appeared to frequently go on official travel together so they could spend more time together.
Because of Wigginton and conduct, some employees described the office as a difficult work environment. Several employees even labeled the USAO to be a "hostile work environment," due to Wigginton and perceived affair, harsh management style, being completely supported by upper management, and having no viable reporting option against to because they believed that would not report the suspected affair or issues with to because they believed that would not challenge his boss or disrupt the office. Compounding the described poor atmosphere, several USAO-SDIL staff told the OIG that rumors were being discussed by special agents and members of the federal court regarding a possible romantic relationship between and Wigginton, which was embarrassing for USAO-SDIL employees. Some employees also expressed feeling awkward around Wigginton, Wigginton, in the same room.
Many employees felt extremely stressed, powerless, and avoided Wigginton and at any cost.
Several employees also expressed concerns regarding Wigginton's and ability to remain impartial regarding office management. For example, staff mentioned to the OIG that Wigginton always supported which granted her tremendous influence over the office. Many employees were afraid to approach Wigginton regarding harsh management style because it was assumed they were together, and Wigginton would always support her. Several staff members even feared retaliation for their cooperation with the OIG investigation.
Two witnesses Wigginton about his relationship with told the OIG that in approximately May 2012, she learned of rumors being discussed in the USAO-SDIL regarding an alleged affair between and said that ever since that conversation, their relationship has been "strained" and had some "tension."

told the OIG that Wigginton and were "very close" and spent a lot of time together, but that he did not suspect an inappropriate relationship. It is stated that after complained to him about the amount of time Wigginton and spent together, spent together, began to be concerned that Wigginton and conduct could raise questions and possibly generate allegations of an inappropriate relationship. Said that he approached Wigginton and told him to spend more time with other people in the office in order to avoid such allegations. Said that Wigginton acknowledged warning, but did not change his behavior in the long run.
A review of Wigginton's and official e-mail and cell phone records suggested nearly constant communication between them; however, the OIG did not discover any inappropriate or intimate communications.
The OIG reviewed Wigginton's training history and determined that he had completed training involving sexual harassment, professional conduct, and ethics.
The OIG conducted a review of appraisals and bonus records. From 2008 through 2014, received overall outstanding marks on her appraisals. From 2008 through 2015, received approximately $15,069.88 in cash awards and $17,073 in salary increases. Despite their personal relationship, Wigginton was the reviewing official on appraisals from 2011 through 2014.
During his first and second interview with the OIG, Wigginton admitted to having an inappropriate relationship with

- Wigginton asserted that his affair did not affect the office adversely or create a hostile work environment.
- Wigginton noted a high performance record by the office during his tenure.
- Wigginton mentioned that his office was full of lawyers, who mostly were not afraid of confrontation and knew how to report misconduct. Wigginton said that employees had "multiple opportunities and avenues in which to address" a hostile work environment to include going to or their immediate supervisor.
- Wigginton argued that the timing of the complaint was suspicious and most likely timed to meet agendas of a few "malcontents" in the office.
- Wigginton said that received pay increases because she was one of the "hardest working" individuals in the office, not due to any preferential treatment by him.
- Wigginton noted that he applied for his retirement prior to having any knowledge of an OIG investigation.
- Wigginton did not believe the affair was a misuse of government time, because the high performance records of the office "speak for themselves."
- A review of computer access logs for both Wigginton and from January 2011 through December 2015 determined that they both logged on to their computers in the USAO-SDIL office on the same day for 26 weekend days. Wigginton denied spending time alone with in their offices on weekend days was a misuse of government time. Wigginton argued that work was performed on those days, and their actions in the office were not anything "tawdry."

During her first and second interview with the OIG, stated she had a romantic relationship with Wigginton. In her second interview with the OIG, stated, "If you ask, did the relationship become sexual, yes, it did." characterized her relationship with Wigginton as consensual.

The OIG investigation concluded that Wigginton engaged in the misconduct as alleged and his actions constituted ethical misconduct in violation of The Standards of Ethical Conduct for Employees of the Executive Branch articulated in 5 CFR § 2635.101, "Basic Obligation of Public Service," and 5 CFR 2635.502, "Personal and Business Relationships," and a violation of regulations and policy against sexual harassment, including 29 CFR § 1604.11 and U.S. Attorney's Manual 3-5.104. We also found several of Wigginton's claims to the OIG to be deeply concerning and to evidence a lack of full acceptance of responsibility for his misconduct; for example, his contention that the timing of the complaint against him was suspicious and due to a few office "malcontents" is remarkable given his acknowledgement that discovery of his hidden affair would have caused the Department to seek his resignation.
